The Consumer Credit Industry Association (CCIA) was originally organized in 1951 as Consumer Credit Insurance Association to be the trade association of insurance companies underwriting consumer credit insurance products sold by lenders and assuring loan repayment in the event of consumer/debtor, death or disability. The scope of activity evolved as new insurance products were introduced to the marketplace, products like credit property, credit unemployment, and collateral protection. CCIA's mission is to preserve, promote and enhance the availability, utility, and integrity of insurance and related products and services delivered in connection with financial transactions.
